Investors in Asian equities have faced a challenging 3 months, given the geopolitical, economic, and regulatory risks within the region, particularly in China. These factors have led to increased volatility and a significant decline in market multiples due to risk aversion. For the CRUX Asia Ex-Japan Fund, this has been a tough period as value has outperformed growth in most major markets, price discovery has declined, and stock prices have not followed earnings momentum. We are seeing signs of life in the technology sector in both Taiwan and South Korea given recent AI exuberance.

Given the fund's growth and optimism bias, underperformance in this environment was anticipated. The fund NAV fell by 6.3%, compared to the benchmark's 4.1% decline, leading to a 2.2% underperformance over 3 months. China's attribution contributed a negative 2.9%, with all of this coming from our overweight position in the country. Excluding China, total attribution was positive.

The portfolio's performance over the past 3-months can be attributed to the combined effect of a large number of stocks experiencing significant falls and an almost equal number witnessing significant rises. Unfortunately, our weighting was tilted more towards the group that declined, resulting in overall underperformance. This was largely due to our asset allocation towards China and lower weights in names that rose significantly. Sixteen of our stocks rose more than 20%, but 23 fell more than 20% during the same period. China, Australia and Indonesia were the primary contributors to the portfolio's underperformance, while India significantly boosted returns. In terms of sectors, Technology and Energy were the only sectors to give positive absolute returns for the index. In the portfolio, Financials, Consumer Discretionary, and Real Estate were positive contributors, while Consumer Staples, Materials, and Health Care negatively impacted the portfolio's performance.
